"Life Skills Management"

30 December 2024 – 3 January 2024

Indian Institute of Technology Bhubaneswar

Objective: The process of proactively recognizing, developing, and effectively utilizing a wide range of practical skills, necessary for navigating life's problems, accomplishing personal objectives, and maintaining overall wellbeing is commonly referred to as life skill management. This covers crucial abilities including self-awareness, lifelong learning, adaptability, and purposeful application in many facets of one's existence. Developing life skills include deliberate actions meant to strengthen these proficiencies via education, application, and introspection. It focuses on the knowledge and comprehension of using this skill set successfully in a variety of settings. The management of life skills also includes planning and goal-setting. While effective planning reflects strategies for implementing the measures necessary to achieve those goals, well-defined, achievable goals serve as a guide and source of motivation for activities to be performed. Additionally, resilience and adaptation are two essential fundamentals for managing life skills. This FDP aims to educate educators and the probable participants about life skill management through a thorough and multifaceted approach for fostering wellbeing and personal growth. It would give the participants the ability to recognize, acquire, and use critical abilities in a variety of real-world situations. When applied regularly, this kind of self-awareness balances, learns, and adapts, guiding one over obstacles to achieving objectives and leading a fulfilling life. This FDP, by large, would focus on the above-mentioned facets.

Smart and Sustainable: Leveraging Industry 4.0 for Green Innovation and Strategic Advantage

Dr. Shivani Vats, Assistant Professor, Information Technology Department, Jagan Institute of Management Studies Sector 5 Rohini, New Delhi, India drshivaniivats@gmail.com

Abstract

The need for sustainable development has intensified amid growing environmental concerns, while the Fourth Industrial Revolution (Industry 4.0) introduces cutting-edge technologies such as Artificial Intelligence (AI), the Internet of Things (IoT), and blockchain that offer immense potential to transform industries into more eco-conscious systems. This paper explores how these smart technologies support green innovation, improve resource efficiency, and drive sustainable performance. Using a qualitative methodology and case study analysis across four key sectors—manufacturing, hospitality, agriculture, and supply chains—this study identifies best practices, use cases, and strategic implications. Findings reveal that smart technologies are central to advancing eco-innovation, reducing carbon footprints, and enhancing operational resilience. However, adoption challenges such as infrastructure costs, data privacy concerns, and talent shortages remain. The paper concludes by recommending actionable strategies such as cross-sector partnerships, policy innovation, and sustainability-focused education to unlock the full potential of Industry 4.0 for a greener future.
