Pseudo-Feminism—A Disgrace To Humanity

Nowadays comments have been passed like- “feminism wants to oppress men”, “it does not stand for equality anymore”, “women have got to empowered, what’s the need of feminism anymore” etc. Feminism was never meant to oppress men. It was meant to eradicate patriarchy and misogynist thoughts. It was meant to stand on the same level as men, not above or below. ‘Feminism,’ in simple terms, means that no gender should be treated with any injustice.

Of late, there is developing a new type of feminism that is rightly called pseudo-feminism. Pseudo-feminists have a deep desire to remedy all the injustices inflicted on women, often by lashing out and demeaning of men. There are humans both good and bad and gender has nothing to do with it. What they forget is the fundamental essence of the movement towards feminism: equality. I reckon both rewards and penalties should be same for same act regardless of gender.

Living in a culture where women face many brutalities every day is the worst thing. Indubitably, women empowerment is necessary and we can see things changing for good, still we have miles to go.

But with power comes responsibility. I am intrigued by the recent incident. A woman, allegedly, got almost hit by a cab and ended up thrashing the man for driving recklessly in a fit of rage. Was the way she reacted to the situation at hand correctly? No. Should we endorse a violent act, just because it was committed by a woman? Certainly not. No feminist in their right mind would back the woman.

Sarvjeet Singh, now known as a harasser, thanks to a false case filed by a college student Jasleen Kaur, opened up about how tough and embarrassing life has been since the incident. He might have been acquitted but verdict shows how false cases ruins one's life.

How traumatic patriarchy can be to women, in the same way, fake feminism can be traumatic for men. Patriarchy and fake feminism, both have negative effects on all the genders. Feminism is required, but it should not to take to such an extent that it turns into oppressing men. Putting fake allegations of sexual and physical assault, playing the woman card to bring the situation to their advantage, body shaming, and assaulting men etc has ruined any lives of many men and family, and this actually needs to stop.

Why Sex Work Should Be Decriminalized?

The talk around sex work has often been treated as a taboo not only in our own home country, but even in those, which are not so socially backward, usually referred to as “progressive” nations. The moment people think about the life of a sex worker, a lot of dirt, cruel, and vicious thoughts come to our mind. But hardly anyone considers to ask themselves why is it so?

Sex workers are adults who receive money or other forms of compensation in exchange for consensual sexual services. A sex worker can be a female, male, or transgender. In most countries, sex work and the activities associated with it are considered criminal acts.

Sex work is criminalized not only through prohibitions on selling sexual services, but also through laws that prohibit the solicitation of sex, living off of the earnings of sex work, brothel-keeping, or the purchase of sexual services. In addition, many male and transgender sex workers face arrest, prosecution, and harassment because of laws that criminalize same-sex intimate relations. Sex workers are also frequently penalized for non-criminal offenses such as loitering, vagrancy, and impeding the flow of traffic.

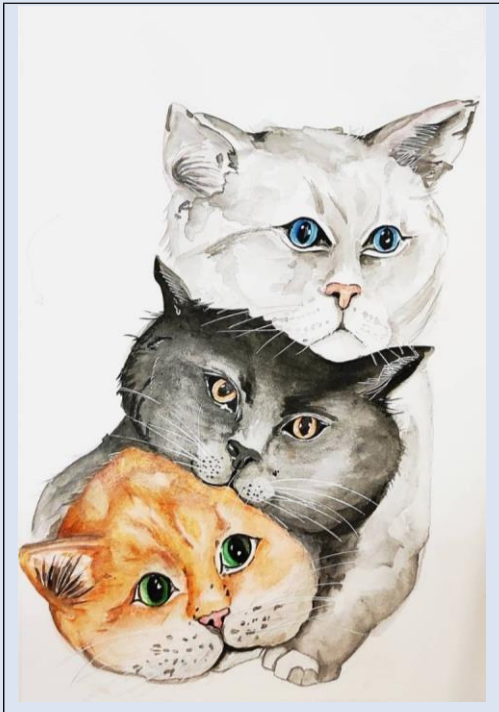

But sex work is not sexual abuse still, the incidences of those go hand in hand. When an adult makes a decision of their own free will, to exchange sex for money, that is not sexual violence. Whereas, when a sex worker is the victim of a crime, including sexual violence such as when a person exchanges sex for money as a result of coercion, undue influence or experiences violence from a customer, or is a victim of trafficking, these are serious crimes, the police should promptly investigate and prosecute the accused, which seldom happens. Sex workers are often exposed to high levels of violence, abuse, or harm, but this is usually because they are working in a criminalized environment.

Decriminalizing sex work maximizes sex workers’ legal protection and their ability to exercise other key human rights, including just treatment and basic health care. Legal recognition of sex workers and their occupation maximizes their protection, dignity, and equality. This is an important step toward destigmatizing sex work. Moreover, any kind of regulations and controls on sex workers and their activities need to be non-discriminatory and otherwise must comply with international human rights law. Decriminalization also means sex workers are more likely to live without the stigma, social exclusion, and fear of violence.

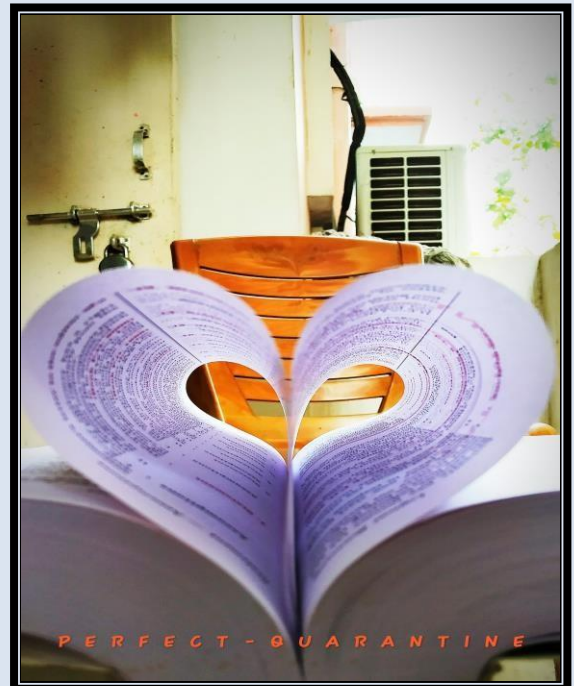

One such model to end the exploitation of sex workers was first introduced in Sweden, as the “Nordic Model”, which suggests that buying sex is illegal, but does not prosecute the sex worker rather the customer of a sex worker. The Nordic model sees “prostitution” as inherently harmful and coerced hence they aim to end sex work by killing the demand for transactional sex. Therefore,. Moreover, it facilitates access to healthcare, justice legal or otherwise; reduces the risk of HIV and other sexually transmitted diseases; promotes safe working conditions. It also allows effective responses to trafficking and challenges state control over sex, sexual expression, and sexuality. Like state controls over reproductive rights and sexual acts between consenting adults and other criminal laws prohibiting sex work attempt to legislate morality and values with scant regard for bodily autonomy.

BUDDING POET'S

It is fascinating how deeply you can think and how little it matters,
And how they are both equally important.

It is fascinating how intense life can be and how fragile it also is,
And how they are both equally important.

And it's fascinating how at the end of it all,
You are still under the same sky.

Hey, leave me alone. You can't touch me like that.
